EXPLANATION OF WHY THIS CASE IS A CASE OF PUBLIC OR GREAT GENERAL INTEREST

The instant case is a felony case in which the defendant was convicted of felonious assault as a lesser included offense of attempted murder following a jury trial, and is a case of public or great general interest. The case is one of public or great general interest because it centers on a rule contained in an opinion of the Supreme Court that the Court of Appeals misapplied. Clarification by this Court would prevent further misapplication of its opinion, and would be consistent with public policy.

The rule in which the Court of Appeals relied on in the instant case applies to when it is appropriate for the trial court to instruct the jury on lesser included offenses. The rule was initially articulated by this Court in State v. Deem, 40 Ohio St.3d 205 (1988), and was later amended by this Court in State v. Evans, 122 Ohio St.3d 381, (2009). In Deem the Court laid out three steps to determine if an offense can be considered a lesser included offense. "An offense may be a lesser included offense of another if (i) the offense carries a lesser penalty than the other; (ii) the greater offense cannot, as statutorily defined, ever be committed without the lesser offense, as statutorily defined, also being committed; and (iii) some element of the greater offense is not required to prove the commission of the lesser offense." Deem, 40 Ohio at 206.

After Deem and prior to Evans, the appellate courts were required to consider whether any conceivable scenario existed where the greater offense could be committed without the commission of the lesser offense when considering whether an instruction on a lesser included offense was appropriate. This led to unjust outcomes. In State v. Nelson, 122 Ohio App.3d 309 (1996), the 5th District Court of Appeals ruled that the trial court erred when it instructed the jury on felonious assault as a lesser included offense to attempted murder. “Though we find the decision to sustain the appellant’s third assignment of error distasteful, we are compelled to do so as a matter of law. What is distasteful is that we fully believe that the evidence totally supports the jury’s finding that appellant was guilty of felonious assault.” Nelson, 122 Ohio at 313. The Court went on to further explain its holding. “Deem’s use of the word ‘ever’ in paragraph three of the syllabus does more than invite hypothetical analysis, it requires it. Because attempted murder can sometimes be committed without committing felonious assault under subsection (A)(2) (e.g. attempt to push someone out a window), paragraph three of the syllabus of Deem requires reversal.” Id. at 315

The type of analysis applied in Nelson, and the subsequent outcome are what makes this Court’s ruling in Evans so significant. In Evans this Court deliberately omitted the word “ever” from the Deem test. Evans, 122 Ohio at 383. The Court stated it did so in order to eliminate “implausible scenarios advanced by parties to suggest the remote possibility that one offense could conceivably be committed without the other also being committed.” Id. at 387. The Court went on to hold that robbery could be a lesser included offense of aggravated robbery despite the fact that scenarios existed where one could indicate possession of a deadly weapon without conveying an implied threat to inflict physical harm. Id. at 388.

The Evans Court also adopted a broad view when comparing statutory elements of each offense as required by the second part of the Deem test. The Court concluded that the elements need not be identically phrased and noted. “The proper overall focus is on the nature and circumstances of the offenses as defined, rather than on the precise words used to define them.” Id. at 386.

The Evans holding makes it clear that the Court favors a more inclusive approach when applying the Deem test. Unfortunately, the Court of Appeals in this case applies the pre-Evans approach when administering the Deem test, and looks for any conceivable scenario in which the greater offense could be committed without the commission of the lesser offense. This search, conducted by the Court of Appeals, for “implausible scenarios” when administering the Deem test is the exact situation the Evans Court wanted to avoid. If the Court of Appeals decision is affirmed then it will open the door for abstract hypothesizing by both sides at the trial level when considering whether a lesser included offense should be instructed to the jury. A clarification by the Court on the proper way to administer the Deem test would help to ensure trial courts are not prevented from instructing juries on lesser included offenses that are clearly appropriate because one party has imagined an improbable hypothetical scenario where the greater offense could be committed without the lesser offense being committed.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE AND FACTS

On September 19, 2009, the Tiffin Police Department responded to a stabbing at 15 Frost Parkway, Tiffin, Seneca County, Ohio. (Tr. Trans. p. 142; 6-12). Evidence showed that Defendant-Appellant was involved in a fight with the victim, David B. Swartz, after Defendant-Appellant hit the victim with a stick or handed a stick to the victim so the victim could hit Defendant-Appellant with the stick. (Tr. Trans. p. 239; 18-19, p. 570; 18-23). As the fight progressed, Defendant-Appellant grabbed a knife that he had in the garage and stabbed the victim multiple times, including wounds in the neck and the areas surrounding the lungs. (Tr. Trans. p. 422; 23 to p. 423; 7). As Defendant-Appellant was stabbing the victim, he stated that he was going to kill the victim. (Tr. Trans. p. 212; 20-22). After the stabbing, and while police and EMS personnel were present, Defendant-Appellant continued to yell that he was going to kill the victim. (Tr. Trans. p. 357; 13-24).

The victim was subsequently transported to Tiffin Mercy Hospital, with lights and sirens due to the life threatening injuries sustained by the victim. (Tr. Trans. p. 370; 8-22). After that, the victim was transported to Mercy St. Vincent's Medical Center by Life Flight helicopter. (Tr. Trans. p. 433; 2-23). The victim sustained injuries in the areas near his lungs, the jugular vein, the carotid artery, the trachea, and the platysma muscle in the neck. (Tr. Trans. p. 447; 9 to p. 448; 12). Further, the victim suffered pain, scarring, and the risk of death as a result of Defendant-Appellant's actions. (Tr. Trans. p. 451; 18 to p. 453; 5).

The Seneca County Grand Jury returned an indictment against David L. Deanda (hereinafter "Defendant-Appellant") on September 23, 2009 that charged him with one (1) count of Attempted Murder, a felony of the first degree, in violation of Ohio Revised Code Sections 2923.02 and 2903.02(A).

A jury trial was held May 17-21, 2010. Appellant was convicted of the lesser included offense of Felonious Assault, a felony of the second degree. A sentencing hearing was held on May 21, 2010, and Appellant was sentenced to a stated prison term of seven (7) years.

The Court of Appeals reversed the judgment of the trial court pursuant to the defendant's fourth assignment of error. The defendant's fourth assignment of error claimed that the trial court committed plain error by instructing the jury on felonious assault as a lesser included offense of attempted murder. This was in spite of the fact that it was the defendant that initially requested the trial court provide the jury with lesser included offense instructions.

ARGUMENT IN SUPPORT OF PROPOSITION OF LAW

A trial court may instruct a jury on R.C. 2903.11(A)(1) as a lesser included offense of attempted murder. This jury instruction is not inconsistent with the amended version of the Deem test set forth in Evans.

The Court of Appeals misinterpreted Evans as prohibiting trial courts from instructing juries on lesser included offenses if the trial courts can conceive of any factual scenario where the offender could commit the greater offense as statutorily defined without the lesser included offense also being committed. The Court of Appeals concocts an improbable hypothetical in which an offender puts “cyanide in another’s food, but the intended victim does not eat it” to justify its holding that the trial court’s instruction of felonious assault violates the third requirement of the Deem test. State v. Deanda, 2012-Ohio-408, 13-10-23 (OHCA3), 8th Paragraph.

The appellate court overlooked the significance of the Evans Court’s omission of “ever” from its amended version of the Deem test. Evans, 122 Ohio at 383. As Justice Shaw noted in his dissent, “the Court in Evans expressly rejected the use of abstract possibilities as the primary tool of analysis for lesser included offenses in Ohio and modified the language of Deem accordingly, by specifically deleting the word ‘ever’ from the of the Deem test.” Deanda, 2012-Ohio-408 Paragraph 16.

The intentional omission of the word “ever” clearly indicates the Evans Court wanted to avoid the assertion of “implausible scenarios” like the one asserted by the Court of Appeals in this case. “Moreover, to ensure that such implausible scenarios will not derail a proper lesser included offense analysis, we further clarify the second part of the Deem test to delete the word ‘ever.’” Evans, 122 Ohio at 387.

If the Court of Appeals interpretation of Evans is to be accepted, then future lesser included offense examinations will almost certainly be derailed by the type of unlikely scenarios the Evans Court hoped to avoid. Regrettably, the Court of Appeals does exactly that in the case at hand when it poses its hypothetical of an individual's food being poisoned with cyanide and the individual then not eating the food. Furthermore, the example provided by the Court of Appeals is the exact type of far-reaching, abstract scenario that the Evans court deemed insufficient to cause a lesser included offense to fail this Court's amended version of the Deem Test. In Evans the court reversed the 8th District's ruling that Robbery could not be a lesser included offense of aggravated robbery. Id. at 389. The Evans Court made this determination despite the defendant's argument that one could hypothetically indicate possession of a deadly weapon without implying a threat to inflict physical harm. The court rejected the “implausible scenario” advanced by the defendant where someone could be purchasing a hunting knife in a sporting goods store at the same time as they are shoplifting a bag of nails. Id. at 386-87.

The Evans Court's position regarding the comparison of statutory elements of two offenses is also significant. The Evans Court first cited State v. Thomas, 40 Ohio St.3d 213, where this Court concluded that involuntary manslaughter is a lesser included offense of aggravated murder. Id. at 386. In Thomas, the Court reasoned that although two elements are not identically phrased, “The proper overall focus is on the nature and circumstances of the offenses as defined, rather than on the precise words used to define them.” Thomas, 40 Ohio at 216-17. The Evans Court also emphasized the need to focus on “whether the words used in the statute defining the greater offense will put the offender on notice that an indictment for that offense could also result in the prosecution of the lesser offense.” Id. at 386. In the case at hand, the defendant was indicted for attempted murder. The language of R.C. 2903.02(A) and 2923.02(A) refers to engaging in “conduct that, if successful, would constitute or result” in “the death of another.” That language was certainly sufficient to put the defendant in this case, who stabbed the victim repeatedly, on notice that he could be convicted of a violation of R.C. 2903.11(A)(1) which refers to “causing serious physical harm to another.” Thus, Evans’ requirement for notice to the offender is satisfied in this case.

The foregoing indicates the trend by this Court which favors inclusion when considering whether to instruct juries on lesser included offenses. As Justice Shaw noted in his dissent, after Evans, “the statutory offenses are now to be examined for possible compatibility instead of for any possible incompatibility as in Deem.” Deanda, 2012-Ohio-408 at Paragraph 21.

In this case the Court of Appeals cites State v. Barnes, 94 Ohio St.3d 21 (2001) as precedent for the notion that felonious assault is not a lesser included offense of attempted murder. Id. at Paragraph 8. However, Barnes was decided eight years prior to Evans. Thus, the Deem test employed by this Court in Barnes to determine felonious assault is not a lesser included offense of attempted murder is no longer controlling because Evans has amended the analysis required for lesser included offenses.

Moreover, the purely abstract analysis employed by the Court of Appeals could set a standard that allows defendants to escape justice. As Justice Lundberg wrote in his concurrence in Barnes, "I believe that the abstract test that this court employs today will beget illogical results in the future. Decision making in the abstract leaves trial courts to struggle with a test that allows criminal defendants to walk away from their crimes, despite the fact that they fit all of the elements of the lesser included offense, unless the state indicts them separately on each potential offense." Barnes, 94 Ohio at 30-31. This exact situation is present in this case. The defendant's conduct of stabbing the victim repeatedly clearly fits all the elements of a violation of R.C. 2903.11(A)(1), the lesser included offense which calls for knowingly causing serious physical harm to another.

There is also evidence of legislative intent for felonious assault to be considered a lesser included offense of attempted murder. In Nelson, the court noted, "We specifically acknowledge that the 1974 Legislative Service Commission Comment to 1972 Am.Sub.H.B. No. 511 states felonious assault is a lesser included offense of attempted murder." Nelson, 122 Ohio at 314. The Nelson opinion then quoted the following portion of the Commission's Comment, "This section [R.C. 2903.11, felonious assault] is a lesser included offense to attempted murder, which is a felony of the first degree. See, section 2923.02. For example, if with purpose to kill, an offender shoots and wounds another, he may be charged with attempted murder. If it is not clear that the offender had a murderous purpose, his act may be an offense under this section.”

Id.

Finally, it must be noted that in this case the jury would not have been instructed on any lesser included offenses had the defendant not opened the door by requesting the jury be instructed on aggravated assault. (Jury Instruction Trans. p. 2; 11-15). Only then did the State of Ohio ask the court to also include the felonious assault instruction, and no formal objection was made by the defendant. (Jury Instruction Trans. p. 5; 8-10). It is peculiar that the defendant is objecting to the same lesser included offense instructions that he thought would benefit him at the trial level.

CONCLUSION

The foregoing indicates that the trial court was correct to instruct the jury on felonious assault. Since the trial court's instruction on felonious assault is consistent with the principles of Evans, the trial court did not err and thus, the Court of Appeals should not have reversed the decision of the trial court. As a result, the State of Ohio requests that the Court of Appeals ruling be reversed and that Ohio law be made clear that felonious assault is a lesser included offense of attempted murder. Failure to address this issue will continue to plague trial courts as they attempt to determine the mandates of Evans.

APPEARANCES:

FILED IN THE COURT OF APPEALS
SENECA COUNTY

FEB 6 2012

MARY K. WARD, CLERK

WILLAMOWSKI, J.

{¶1} Defendant-appellant David L. Deanda (“Deanda”) brings this appeal from the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of Seneca County finding him guilty of felonious assault and sentencing him to seven years in prison. For the reasons set forth below, the judgment is reversed.

{¶2} On September 19, 2009, Deanda was involved in a fight with David B. Swartz (“Swartz”). During the fight, Deanda grabbed a knife and proceeded to stab the victim multiple times in the neck and chest. Deanda was yelling that he was going to kill Swartz. When the police and emergency medical technicians arrived, Deanda continued to yell that he was going to kill Swartz. Swartz was eventually life flighted to a hospital due to his injuries.

{¶3} On September 23, 2009, the Seneca County Grand Jury indicted Deanda on one count of attempted murder, a felony of the first degree, in violation of R.C. 2923.02 and 2903.02(A). A jury trial was held from May 17 to May 21, 2010. At the conclusion, the jury convicted Deanda of the lesser included offense of felonious assault, a felony of the second degree. On May 21, 2010, a sentencing hearing was held. The trial court sentenced Deanda to serve seven years in prison. Deanda appeals from these judgments and raises the following assignments of error.

First Assignment of Error

The trial court erred to the prejudice of [Deanda] by permitting [the State] to introduce various instances of inadmissible hearsay testimony over the objection of the defense in violation of the Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and Article I, Section 10 of the Ohio Constitution.

Second Assignment of Error

The trial court erred to the prejudice of [Deanda] by denying the proffered testimony of Joey Deanda and Vicki Deanda into evidence.

Third Assignment of Error

[Deanda's] conviction should be overturned because certain statements made during the prosecution's rebuttal argument at closing amounted to prosecutorial misconduct.

Fourth Assignment of Error

[Deanda's] conviction should be overturned because the trial court's instruction of felonious assault as a lesser included offense of attempted murder is erroneous and thus the trial court committed plain error.

Fifth Assignment of Error

[Deanda's] conviction was against the manifest weight of the evidence.

In the interest of clarity, we will address the assignments of error out of order.

{¶4} The fourth assignment of error alleges that the trial court erred by instructing the jury that felonious assault is a lesser included offense of attempted murder. “[A] criminal offense may be a lesser included offense of another if (1) the offense carries a lesser penalty than the other; (2) the greater offense cannot, as statutorily defined, ever be committed without the lesser offense, as statutorily defined, also being committed; and (3) some elements of the greater offense is not required to prove the commission of the lesser offense.” State v. Barnes, 94 Ohio St.3d 21, 2002-Ohio-68, 759 N.E.2d 1240 (citing State v. Deem (1988), 40 Ohio St.3d 205, 533 N.E.2d 294. The Ohio Supreme Court in Barnes determined that R.C. 2903.11(A)(2) is not a lesser included offense of R.C. 2903.02(A) and R.C. 2923.02(A). Id.

{¶5} However, the Ohio Supreme Court did modify this test in State v. Evans, 122 Ohio St.3d 381, 2009-Ohio-2974, 911 N.E.2d 889. In Evans, the Supreme Court removed the word “ever” from the test and set up a modified test. Id. at ¶25.

In determining whether an offense is a lesser included offense of another, a court shall consider whether one offense carries a greater penalty than the other, whether some element of the greater offense is not required to prove commission of the lesser offense, and whether the greater offense as statutorily defined cannot be committed without the lesser offense as statutorily defined also being committed.

Id. at paragraph 2 of the syllabus. When reviewing the offenses, the offenses must be examined in the abstract and the specific facts of the case may not be considered. Id. at ¶25.

The state contends that the strict comparison of elements required by the second part of the Deem test has produced incongruous and illogical results that fail to hold criminal defendants accountable for crimes in the absence of indictments for each related offense. The state urges us to modify the second part of the Deem test to permit courts to consider the particular facts and circumstances of each case in determining whether one offense is a lesser included offense of another, or to consider whether “the offenses are so similar that the commission of one offense will necessarily result in commission of the other,” as we have done in our analogous test for allied offenses of similar import. * * *

On the other hand, [the defendant] contends that adoption of the state’s fact-based approach will impinge upon a criminal defendant’s constitutional right to a grand jury indictment, permitting convictions for offenses that were either considered and rejected or never even contemplated by the grand jury. He asserts that the state’s proposed test would create uncertainty for prosecutors, defendants, and the courts by making it impossible to predict, before trial, what lesser included offenses would be at issue. In addition, [the defendant] argues that because we have previously held that robbery is not a lesser included offense of aggravated robbery, applying a contrary ruling would violate his due process rights.

We have consistently held that in applying Deem to lesser included offenses, “ ‘ “ ‘the evidence presented in a particular case is irrelevant to the determination of whether an offense, as statutorily defined, is necessarily included in a greater offense.’ ”” * * * Indeed, in Barnes, we rejected the state’s request that we consider the specific facts of the case in determining whether felonious assault with a deadly weapon was a lesser included offense of attempted murder. * * * But we note that the facts of a case are relevant in determining whether a court should instruct the jury on a lesser included offense. Specifically, we have stated that after the three parts of the Deem test are met, “[i]f the evidence is such that a jury could reasonably find the defendant not guilty of the charged offense, but could convict the defendant of the lesser included offense, then the judge should instruct the jury on the lesser included offense.” * * * Based upon the foregoing, we decline the state’s invitation to abandon our precedent in this regard.

Id. at ¶11-13. Although the words need not be identical, the elements must match in such a way that one cannot commit the greater offense without committing the lesser offense. Id. at ¶22.

{¶6} In this case, Deanda was charged with a violation of R.C. 2903.02(A) and R.C. 2923.02(A), attempted murder. He was convicted of felonious assault in violation of R.C. 2903.11(A)(1). A review of the offenses in this case show that attempted murder, as charged, was a felony of the first degree, and felonious assault, as convicted, was a felony of the second degree. Thus, there is a greater potential punishment for the attempted murder charge than the felonious assault charge. Thus, the first part of the Deem test is met.

{¶7} Next we look at the statutory elements in the abstract. “No person shall purposely cause the death of another * * *.” R.C. 2903.02(A). “No person, purposely or knowingly, and when purpose or knowledge is sufficient culpability for the commission of an offense, shall engage in conduct that, if successful, would constitute or result in the offense.” R.C. 2923.02(A). “[A] person is guilty of attempted murder when he or she ‘purposely * * * engage[s] in conduct that, if successful, would constitute or result in’ the purposeful killing of another.”

Barnes, 94 Ohio St.3d at 26. Deanda was found guilty of violating R.C. 2903.11(A)(1), which states that no person shall knowingly cause serious physical harm to another. R.C. 2903.11(A)(1). In this case, the offense of attempted murder did require the State to prove an additional element, that the serious physical harm could result in death. Thus, the second part of the Deem test is met.

{¶8} Finally, this court must determine whether the greater offense can be committed without committing the lesser offense as statutorily defined. Despite the State's argument to the contrary, it is possible to commit attempted murder without violating R.C. 2903.11(A)(1). For example, if one were to put cyanide in another's food, but the intended victim does not eat it, the first party is still guilty of attempted murder because they purposely committed the act that, if successful, would result in the death of the victim. However, the first party would not have violated R.C. 2903.11(A)(1) because no serious physical harm occurred.<sup>1</sup> Following the reasoning of the Ohio Supreme Court in Barnes, this court must find that R.C. 2903.11(A)(1) is not a lesser included offense of attempted murder. Since Deanda was neither indicted on felonious assault, nor is it a lesser included offense of attempted murder, it is an error affecting a substantial right and is thus reversible error. The fourth assignment of error is sustained.

{¶9} The dissent argues that given the facts of this case, the very acts which formed the basis of the attempted murder charge were felonious assault. We agree. The dissent then concludes that under the facts of this case, we should find that felonious assault is a lesser included offense of attempted murder. This conclusion is not supported by the holding in Evans, which clearly stated that the individual facts of the case may not be considered.<sup>2</sup> Instead, the Evans court specifically stated that we must consider whether the greater offense cannot be committed without committing the lesser offense. Id. at ¶26.

{¶10} In the first assignment of error, Deanda claims that the trial court erred by allowing hearsay testimony to be presented over objection by the defense. “‘Hearsay’ is a statement, other than one made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing, offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted.” Evid.R. 801(C). Unless the statement meets one of the exceptions to the rule, hearsay is not admissible in a trial. Evid.R. 802.

{¶11} In support of his argument, Deanda presents four statements that he claims should have been excluded. The first is Officer Laverne Keefe’s statement that Swartz had stated that Deanda was the person who injured him. Tr. 176-77. The third and fourth instances of hearsay statements were found in the testimony of Lieutenant Michelle Craig. She testified that Swartz called and said the hospital was going to keep him and that Deanda was the one who caused the injuries. Tr. 476-77. Deanda's counsel objected on the basis of hearsay, but the objections were overruled. No exception exists for identity. The first statement was made after the scene was secure and Deanda was being escorted away. The other two statements were made in a phone call to the police station made by Swartz from the hospital. There is no indication in the record that the statements meet any of the exceptions set forth in Evid.R. 803. Repeating the out of court statement of the victim that the defendant was the one responsible for his injuries and that the hospital was keeping him was meant to persuade the jury that the defendant was guilty and is thus a hearsay statement.

<sup>2</sup> We note, as does the dissent herein, that the Supreme Court in its analysis does appear to consider the facts. However, the Supreme Court specifically said we may not do so. We must do as they say.

{¶12} The second instance of hearsay to which Deanda objects is a statement by Detective Shawn Vallery as to what he was told by an unidentified forensic nurse at St. Vincent's Medical Center concerning the condition of the victim. The statements of an unidentified third party concerning the injuries to the victim are hearsay. The State argues that these statements were merely offered to show how the investigation progressed. Although this may be true as well, the statements themselves were also offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, i.e. the extent of the injuries. The witness could have explained the progress of the investigation without repeating the statements of third parties. However, since this court has already determined that prejudicial error occurred, the issue raised in the first assignment of error of whether the admission of hearsay statements is prejudicial or harmless error is moot and will not be addressed by this court.

{¶13} Having found prejudicial error in the fourth assignment of error, the second, third, and fifth assignments of error are also moot and need not be addressed. The judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of Seneca County is reversed and the matter is remanded for further proceedings.

ROGERS, J. concurs.

SHAW, P.J., DISSENTS

{¶14} The majority concludes that because it is possible in the abstract, to conceive of a factual scenario where one might commit attempted murder without committing felonious assault, that felonious assault cannot be a lesser included offense of attempted murder in the case before us. The “abstract possibility analysis” derives from the second prong of a three part test set forth in State v. Deem, (1988), 40 Ohio St.3d 205. Specifically, the Deem test stated that before a trial court may instruct upon a lesser included offense, the court must find that “the greater offense cannot, as statutorily defined, ever be committed without the lesser offense, as statutorily defined, also being committed.” Deem at paragraph three of the syllabus (Emphasis added).

{¶15} The majority further cites the subsequent decision of the Ohio Supreme Court in State v. Barnes, (2002), 94 Ohio St.3d 21, which also strictly relied upon the Deem test, in order to determine that felonious assault was not a lesser included offense of attempted murder.

{¶16} However, in State v. Evans, (2009), 122 Ohio St.3d 381, the Supreme Court of Ohio acknowledged the implausible results that courts were reaching in attempting to follow the purely hypothetical and speculative analysis that seemed to be mandated by the language of the Deem test. As a result, the Court in Evans expressly rejected the use of abstract possibilities as the primary tool of analysis for lesser included offenses in Ohio and modified the language of Deem accordingly, by specifically deleting the word “ever” from the second prong of the Deem test. See Evans, at 383. As the Court stated, this was done to ensure that implausible scenarios advanced by the parties to suggest the remote possibility that one offense could conceivably be committed without the other being committed would no longer “derail a proper lesser included offense analysis.” Id. at 387.

{¶17} Thus the “clarified” test for lesser included offenses in Ohio, as announced by Evans, now states:

In determining whether an offense is a lesser included offense of another, a court shall consider whether one offense carries a greater penalty than the other, whether some element of the greater offense is not required to prove commission of the lesser offense, and whether the greater offense, as statutorily defined, cannot be committed without the lesser offense as statutorily defined also being committed. (State v. Deem (1988), 40 Ohio St.3d 205, clarified.)

Evans at second paragraph of the syllabus.

{¶18} The Evans court declined to further modify Deem by adopting a test for lesser included offenses based entirely on the facts and circumstances of each case. Evans at 386. However, it is also clear that under Evans the factual context of a case is no longer entirely irrelevant, and may be considered, both in conducting a more pragmatic comparison of statutory elements than permitted by Deem, and insofar as it may be necessary to determine whether the evidence supports an instruction on the lesser charge.

But we note that the facts of a case are relevant in determining whether a court should instruct the jury on a lesser included offense. Specifically, we have stated that after the three parts of the Deem test are met, 'if the evidence is such that a jury could reasonably find the defendant not guilty of the charged offense, but could convict the defendant of the lesser included offense, then the judge should instruct the jury on the lesser included offense.' (Emphasis in original) (Citations omitted.)

Evans at 385.

{¶19} In concluding that robbery was a lesser included offense of aggravated robbery in the case before it, the Evans court was called on to determine whether the conduct of “displaying, brandishing, indicating possession, or using a deadly weapon” in the attempt or commission of a theft offense as stated in the greater offense of aggravated robbery, [R.C. 2911.01(A)(1)], also constituted “a threat to inflict physical harm” in the attempt or commission of a theft offense, as defined in the lesser offense of robbery, [R.C. 2911.02(A)(2)].

{¶20} The Evans court’s rationale in reaching an affirmative answer is instructive to the case before us:

While these elements are not identically phrased, we have recognized: 'The test is not a word game to be performed by rote by matching the words chosen by the legislature to define criminal offenses. Some offenses, such as aggravated murder and murder, lend themselves to such a simple matching test; others do not. * * * We would also note that the elements of the offenses are 'matched' only * * * to determine if 'some element' of the greater offense is not found in the lesser offense. The proper overall focus is on the nature and circumstances of the offenses as defined, rather than on the precise words used to define them. (Citation omitted). Thus, the test does not require identical language to define the two offenses, but focuses upon whether the words used in the statute defining the greater offense will put the offender on notice that an indictment for that offense could also result in the prosecution of the lesser included offense.

Evans at 386. (Emphasis added.)

{¶21} Under the quoted language from Evans, set forth above, the reference to the “circumstances of the offenses as defined” necessarily implies that at the very least, the factual conduct described in the statutory offense is relevant to provide a realistic context for conducting the necessary comparisons of statutorily defined offenses. Additionally, as the Evans court does in the aggravated robbery/robbery comparisons conducted below, the statutory offenses are now to be examined for possible compatibility instead of for any possible incompatibility as in Deem.

{¶22} In Evans, the two statutory offenses at issue describe conduct in sufficient detail such as “displaying a deadly weapon” and a “threat to inflict physical harm” to enable the court to make the comparisons necessary to determine whether one type of conduct also included the other in that case. Thus, upon first concluding on its own rationale that “the threat of physical harm” in the robbery statute need not be explicit, but could also be an implied threat, the Evans court was then able to compare the conduct described in the aggravated robbery offense with the conduct described in the robbery statute and conclude that “[o]ne cannot display, brandish, indicate possession of, or use a deadly weapon in the context of committing a theft offense without conveying an implied threat to inflict physical harm. It is the very act of displaying, brandishing, indicating possession, or using the weapon that constitutes the threat to inflict harm because it intimidates the victim into complying with the command to relinquish property without consent.” (Emphasis added.) Evans at 386.

{¶23} However, unlike Evans, in the case before us, the operative language of the attempted murder statute is only the allegation that the defendant did “engage in conduct that, if successful, would constitute or result in the offense” [of murder]. (Emphasis added.) The element of “conduct” as used in the attempt statute [R.C. 2923.02(A)] is unique in that it carries no further statutory definition or description of its own but instead, clearly requires the incorporation of whatever elements are present in the offense attempted, in this case the offense of murder.

{¶24} One could argue that as the only available reference for any comparison or analysis, the undefined word “conduct” as used in the attempt statute not only invokes, but necessarily requires reference to the factual allegations of conduct in any given case in order to conduct a proper lesser included offense analysis for an attempt charge under Evans. In this case, the multiple stabbings and serious physical harm alleged would be more than sufficient to satisfy any such lesser included offense analysis. However, because the same result can be reached in the case before us by conducting the same analysis of statutory language as conducted in Evans, without reference to the specific facts and circumstances in evidence, it is unnecessary to further address or rely upon this interpretation at this time.

{¶25} In any event, under the Evans test, the language of the attempted murder charge not only permits, but necessarily requires, closer examination of the “statutory circumstances” of the attempted murder offense and the felonious assault offense charged in this case, and then if necessary, reference to the specific factual allegations and/or conduct in evidence in order to make a proper lesser included offense analysis. See Evans at 385. Thus, just as the Evans court had to determine whether the conduct of “displaying, brandishing, indicating possession, or using a deadly weapon” in an aggravated robbery offense also constituted a “threat to inflict physical harm” for purposes of a robbery offense, the only relevant question for this court to determine is whether the conduct of “knowingly causing serious physical harm” to the extent that if successful it would constitute purposely causing the death of another also constitutes “knowingly causing serious physical harm”.

{¶26} Applying the statutory circumstances analysis of Evans to the case before us then, it is clear that the defendant could not “engage in conduct” (knowingly causing serious physical harm) that if successful (serious enough to produce death) would constitute purposefully causing the death of the victim [attempted murder as defined in R.C.2923.02(A)/R.C. 2903.02(A)], without also engaging in conduct that would constitute knowingly causing serious physical harm to that victim [felonious assault as defined in R.C. 2903.11(A)(1)]. Since this is also the scenario that is actually reflected in the evidence of this case, the instruction on the lesser included offense of felonious assault was warranted on both statutory and evidentiary grounds, and in any event, did not constitute plain error.

{¶27} Based on the foregoing, I respectfully dissent from the decision of the majority to reverse this conviction. The trial court was correct to instruct the jury on the lesser included offense of felonious assault in this case. The fourth assignment of error should be overruled and this court should address the merits of the remaining assignments of error.

STATE OF OHIO,

PLAINTIFF-APPELLEE,

CASE NO. 13-10-23

v.

DAVID L. DEANDA,

J U D G M E N T
E N T R Y

DEFENDANT-APPELLANT.

For the reasons stated in the opinion of this Court, the fourth assignment of error is sustained and it is the judgment and order of this Court that the judgment of the trial court is reversed with costs assessed to Appellee for which judgment is hereby rendered. The cause is hereby remanded to the trial court for further proceedings and for execution of the judgment for costs.

It is further ordered that the Clerk of this Court certify a copy of this Court's judgment entry and opinion to the trial court as the mandate prescribed by App.R. 27; and serve a copy of this Court's judgment entry and opinion on each party to the proceedings and note the date of service in the docket. See App.R. 30.
