OHIO FIRST DISTRICT COURT OF APPEALS

Per Curiam.

{¶1} Plaintiff-appellant Anthony McClain appeals the trial court’s judgment denying his motion to vacate. For the reasons stated below, we reverse the trial court’s judgment.

{¶2} McClain sued the state of Ohio in 2008. He voluntarily dismissed his complaint in 2010, and refiled it in 2011 in Franklin County, Ohio. In August 2016, the venue of the case was transferred to Hamilton County, Ohio. The record demonstrates that in September 2016, McClain’s counsel acknowledged the transfer and completed a notification form indicating his current address. In November 2016, the trial court dismissed McClain’s case, on its own motion, under Civ.R. 41(B)(1) for failure to prosecute. After learning of the dismissal, McClain moved to vacate the court’s judgment of dismissal under Civ.R. 60(B). The trial court overruled that motion, and McClain appealed.

{¶3} In his single assignment of error, McClain argues that the trial court erred by overruling his motion to vacate. We are constrained to agree under the authority of Svoboda v. City of Brunswick, 6 Ohio St.3d 348, 453 N.E.2d 648 (1983). In Svoboda, the Ohio Supreme Court held that because the trial court lacked authority to dismiss the underlying action under Civ.R. 41(B)(1), it had erred by denying Svoboda’s Civ.R. 60(B) motion to vacate the judgment of dismissal. The Svoboda court noted that when a court proceeds, on its own motion, under Civ.R. 41(B)(1) to dismiss a case for failure to prosecute, it can do so only “after notice to the plaintiff’s counsel or to plaintiff.” No such notice was provided by the trial court in Svoboda. Id. at 350.

{¶4} Similarly, there is nothing in our record demonstrating that McClain or his counsel was given notice, prior to dismissal, that McClain’s action would be dismissed for failure to prosecute. Therefore, because the notice required under Civ.R. 41(B)(1) was not given to McClain or his counsel, the court did not have the authority to dismiss McClain's lawsuit. Because the trial court lacked authority to dismiss the lawsuit, it erred in overruling McClain's motion to vacate the judgment of dismissal. See Svoboda at 351. The single assignment of error is sustained.

{¶5} Accordingly, the judgment of the trial court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion and the law.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.
